ARISE FROM PARTIES' IMMIGRATION STATUS: ECONOMIC REMEDIES

This bench card provides information for state court judges on issues unique to immigrants, such as: eligibility for legal work authorization, eligibility to receive publically funded benefits and services, the use of Individual Tax Identification Numbers (ITINs), and enforcement of immigration affidavits of support in state court proceedings. The purpose of this bench card is to provide a quick reference and to help judges identify immigration issues that might affect the range of outcomes available in cases before them. This includes economic issues that might arise in family, juvenile, criminal and civil court cases. The information contained in this bench card provides accurate information on work authorization, benefits access, assurances made to the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) regarding support of family members, and information about how immigrants who are working (including without authorization) are able to file tax returns, pay taxes, and provide copies of those returns to the court.

The forms of economic relief available to immigrants in protection order, custody, child support, spousal support, and divorce proceedings that the legally accurate immigration information included in this bench card can assist courts deciding include, but are not limited to:

- Child support,
- Spousal support,
- Deciding which parent claims the children on tax returns,
- Determining ability to pay child or spousal support and how much a parent or spouse is earning when they are working in the informal economy receiving cash,
- Enforcing an Affidavit of Support as a contract in a divorce or civil proceeding,
- Disproportionate share of property division in divorce cases involving domestic violence,
- Ordering payment of medical, car and house insurance, rent, mortgage and utility bills in a protection order or divorce case; or
- Orders in child abuse and neglect or delinquency proceedings regarding obtaining public benefits for a non-citizen child.

IMMIGRANTS ELIGIBLE TO WORK

A large percentage of immigrants, both undocumented and documented, are working in the United States. In 2017, about 29 million immigrants were working or looking for work in the United States.¹ Of those, more than 7 million were undocumented immigrants.² An individual's ability to work could have economic implications on a variety of court cases whether or not that person is undocumented or documented. Having access to accurate information by the form of immigration status that the parties before the court have or are pursuing allows family or juvenile court judges, as well as civil and criminal court judges, to issue more effective orders.³

Eligibility to obtain employment in the United States may be an important factor for a state court judge in determining issues of alimony, child support, ability to pay for health insurance, the ability to meet conditions of probation, or the ability to pay for services. In some instances, state courts may have to consider the lack of employment authorization in deciding whether a parent should receive alimony or child support. For example, if a court awards custody of a child to a battered immigrant parent who does not have or who has not yet attained legal work authorization, ordering the non-custodial parent to pay child and/or spousal support to assure that the custodial parent is able to provide an adequate home for the child would provide important economic stability for the battered immigrant and children. For a party that is being ordered to pay child support, lack of work authorization is not determinative and if an immigrant parent works they can be ordered to pay child support and cannot use a lack of work authorization as a defense. Courts should also note that payment of court ordered child support regardless of work authorization helps an immigrant prove good moral character in several types of immigration cases including naturalization.⁴

The following are the most common types of immigrants with legal eligibility to work in the United States who are likely to appear in a court case.⁵ This chart is helpful in determining whether an individual can use lack of employment authorization as a defense against an order to pay or an order to find employment. It is important to note that there are immigrants with legal immigration status who are not granted legal work authorization, so having legal immigration status alone does not indicate that an individual is approved to work. Conversely, an immigrant applying for immigration relief can be granted legal work authorization and have it for several years while they are undocumented and awaiting legal status.

IMMIGRANTS ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS OR SERVICES⁶

Federal immigration law limits the eligibility of immigrants, depending on their immigration status, for the following categories of benefits: (1) Federal public benefits, (2) Federal Means-Tested Public Benefits, and (3) State and local public benefits. What benefits an immigrant can receive depends on factors that include:

- When the immigrant first entered the United States
- The type of immigration status the immigrant has or is in the process of applying for
- Whether the immigrant has been a victim of domestic violence, child abuse, elder abuse, or human trafficking; if the victim has applied for crime victim-related

⁶ For further information on benefits eligibility for immigrant crime victims, see Daniel Enos, et al., Family Court Bench Card on Immigrant Crime Victim Access to Public Benefits and Services, National Immigrant Women’s Advocacy Project (NIWAP) (Mar. 29, 2019), available at <https://niwaplibrary.wcl.american.edu/pubs/pb-bchcrd-pubbenefits>; for VAWA benefits eligibility process, see Jordan Tacher, Abigail Whitmore and Leslye E. - immigration benefits; and where their case is in the DHS adjudication process⁷
- The immigrant’s state of residence;
 - Whether the applicant is a child (under 21 years of age) or an adult 21 years of age or older; and
 - Whether they can meet the heightened application requirements of specific benefits programs

With regard to the eligibility for benefits, there are two classes of immigrants, “qualified immigrants” and “non-qualified immigrants.” Among some “non-qualified immigrants” who are “lawfully present” or are “persons residing under color of law (PRUCOL)” can receive some state-funded benefits. An immigrant must be a qualified immigrant to be eligible for federal public benefits and federal means-tested public benefits unless the immigrant falls under one of many enumerated exceptions.

Federal means-tested public benefits are the most difficult to access for many immigrants. An individual must wait 5 years after becoming a qualified immigrant eligible to receive public benefits before they are able to access federally funded TANF and TANF funded childcare, Medicaid, SCHIP, food stamps and SSI. States may provide state funded benefits for certain immigrants during this 5-year waiting period.

A federal public benefit is defined as:

- Any grant, contract, loan, professional license, or commercial license provided by an agency of the United States or by appropriated funds of the United States; and
- Any retirement, welfare, health, disability, public or assisted housing, post-secondary education, food assistance, unemployment benefit, or any other similar benefit for which payments or assistance are provided to an individual, household, or family eligibility unit by an agency of the United States or by appropriated funds of the United States.

Examples include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Immigrants who are temporary work, student, or tourist visa holders; • Immigrants paroled into the U.S. for less than one year; • VAWA applicants prior to receipt of a prima facie determination letter • U visa holders and applicants; • SIJS children before they are granted

Some examples of federal benefits available to all non-citizens, including non-qualified immigrants, are:

- Emergency medical assistance;
- Short-term, non-cash, in-kind emergency disaster relief;
- HHS funded public health clinics (e.g. community or migrant health clinic)⁸
- Assistance or benefits under the Child Nutrition Act of 1966;
- Public health assistance for immunizations with respect to immunizations for diseases and for testing and treatment of symptoms of communicable diseases whether or not such symptoms are caused by a communicable disease;

Some examples of federal benefits that are NOT available to all non-citizens are:

- The supplemental security income (SSI) program
- SNAP

The nexus between immigration law and benefits eligibility can be highly complex. Judges seeking guidance and greater detail on whether and which benefits parties can access before the court can look to the Bench Card on Immigrant Crime Victim’s and Immigrant Children’s Access to Public Benefits and Services⁹ available on the National Immigrant Women’s Advocacy Project (NIWAP), American University, Washington College of Law web library. Judges can also receive technical assistance¹⁰ from issue experts at NIWAP by calling (202) 274-4457 or e-mailing niwap@wcl.american.edu. NIWAP’s web library also has additional information on legal rights to access public benefits and services for immigrant crime victims and children. and/or other limitations, states may enact state laws that extend or limit access to state funded public benefits to various categories of immigrants. Up to 41 states offer some form of state funded public benefits to immigrants that provide access to state publicly funded assistance that goes beyond what immigrants are eligible for under federal public benefits programs. The state funded benefits most commonly extended to immigrants are access to state funded prenatal care, health care for children through CHIP and/or access to state funded medical assistance. A smaller number of states extend access to state funded TANF to some groups of immigrants.

As a result, which state or federally funded public benefits an immigrant qualifies for varies by state, by public benefits program, by when the immigrant first entered the United States, by what form of immigration relief, if any, and the immigrant may have or may have filed for. Additionally, with regard to some public benefits programs, immigrant crime victims will have more access to state or federally funded public benefits than other immigrants in their state.

NIWAP has created an on-line public benefits map that can be used to identify which immigrants qualify for which benefits programs in each state. The benefits map details eligibility information based on the benefit sought, immigration status, and state in which the immigrant who may need benefits lives. The on-line public benefits map is organized by type of benefit and by state.

CHILD AND SPOUSAL SUPPORT FOR IMMIGRANTS

Child and spousal support cases are frequently brought before family court judges. These cases are particularly important when they involve low-income abused immigrants. Child support is particularly important for battered immigrants who cannot work because their abusive spouse never filed immigration papers to provide the victim and/or her child legal immigration status the victim is eligible to receive. In cases in which the victim’s immigrant or lawful permanent resident spouse did file an immigration case for the benefit of the immigrant spouse, there will be an affidavit of support that is a contract that can be enforced by state courts in divorce or civil proceedings. “Affidavits of Support” are discussed further below.

Battered immigrants who come before courts in family court proceedings will often qualify for or be in the process of applying for VAWA, U visa, T visa, or battered spouse waiver immigration relief. All of these forms of crime victim related immigration relief include provision of legal work authorization for the victim, but it can take from 6 months to 5 years for the victim to receive work authorization due largely to adjudication backlogs. How long the wait is varies by immigration case type. During this wait, victims have no access to legal work authorization.

Ordering child support and spousal support in these cases provides what can be life-saving assistance helping the victim economically eliminating a crucial barrier to a victim being able to leave an abusive home.¹² Judges may encounter other issues unique to immigrants when hearing cases. Courts have ruled when an immigrant parent is working or has income that parent cannot use the excuse of lack of legal work authorization to avoid orders to pay child support for the immigrant parent’s children.¹³ When immigrant parents are working in the informal economy, proof of earnings can be more complex. However, proof of income can be attained in a variety of ways including:

- Employer’s statements
- Ordering the completion of court financial statements in which the court can identify expenses that the parent is paying that would not take precedence over child support payments (e.g. luxury items including cars, home entertainment systems)
- Witness testimony
- Tax returns filed by immigrants using Individual Tax Identification Numbers (ITINs) (see discussion of ITINs below);

Child and/or spousal support can be ordered in a range of family court proceedings including divorce, legal separation, custody, and civil protection orders.¹⁴ The statutory duty to pay child support imposed on parents in the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the District of Columbia,¹⁵ applies to all persons without regard to immigration status. When the parties before the court are separated the court should order child support in immigrant and mixed immigration status families in the same manner and applying the same law and child support guidelines that apply in all cases. All court ordered child support should be paid through the court. This provides either parent who is an immigrant documentation of the child support paid which is beneficial for both child support enforcement and immigration purposes.

An order for child support can also be issued even when the child being supported is not in the United States. If the court has personal jurisdiction in a family court case over the custodial and non-custodial parent, courts can award child support for the parties' children including children who do not reside in the United States. When the court ordered child support is being paid for a child who resides outside of the U.S., courts mail the child support received to the custodial parent or the child's custodian at their address in the country in which the child resides.¹⁶

Use of Individual Tax Identification Numbers (ITINs) in Child and Spousal Support Cases

Individual Tax Identification Numbers (ITINs) are issued by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) to certain nonresident and resident immigrants, their spouses, and dependents for the purpose of filing income tax returns.¹⁷ Application for an ITIN must be accompanied by a tax return. Immigrants who are working will complete a tax return reporting their current year's income and will submit the tax return as a required part of the application for the ITIN. The IRS issues ITINs regardless of immigration status because immigrants may have tax filing and payment obligations under U.S. tax laws.¹⁸ In fact, an eventual naturalization requires showing of good moral character, which includes the obligation to report income to the IRS, or to state and local taxing authorities.¹⁹

Taxes may be filed by an employed immigrant who is working who is not eligible for a work authorization and a Social Security Number. Immigrants who cannot obtain a social ¹⁶ In 1996, section 459A of the Social Security Act (the Act) affirmed that "[t]he Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, is authorized to declare any foreign country (or a political subdivision thereof) to be a foreign reciprocating country if the foreign country has established, or undertakes to establish, procedures for the establishment and enforcement of duties of support owed to obligees who are residents of the United States, and such procedures are substantially in conformity with the standards prescribed under subsection (b) [which include procedures for establishing paternity and enforcing orders]." ¹⁹ The application for naturalization (N-400) asks whether the individual has ever failed to file a required federal, state, or local tax return. The form also asks whether the applicant owes any overdue federal, state, or local taxes. Responding yes necessitates explaining the situation to the USCIS. security number use the 9-digit ITIN in place of the social security number on their U.S. tax returns and other tax related documents. Proof of an ITIN can be useful in determining whether a person has filed taxes – and thus, provides evidence of the immigrant’s income. Working immigrants who have a path through which they plan on applying for lawful permanent residency will obtain and use ITIN numbers to pay taxes, because paying taxes provides evidence of economic earning capacity needed to overcome the public charge ground of inadmissibility. In addition, immigrants who plan on applying for citizenship will need to prove a history of having filed tax returns in order to naturalize.

Filing taxes through an ITIN also helps immigrants who may in the future have an option to attain lawful permanent residency and naturalization which require proof of good moral character. Proof of good moral character include proving a history of payment taxes on income the immigrant earned (including unauthorized work). To allow for filing of tax returns and payment of taxes the IRS created the ITIN.

Use of Affidavits of Support in Child and Spousal Support Cases²⁰

An affidavit of support is a document that is filed by a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident when the family member that he or she has sponsored to attain legal immigration status through a family-based immigration applies for lawful permanent residence.²¹ The affidavit of support is a sworn statement promising the United States government that the sponsor will financially support the immigrant family member applying for lawful permanent residence. The affidavit of support is also required for immigrants seeking employment-based work visas when the sponsoring employer is a spouse, parent, son, daughter, or sibling when the immigrant sponsor applying for the visa has at least a 5% interest in the company that will employ the immigrant family member.²² An affidavit of support that has been filed in an immigration case can be used as evidence and can be enforceable as a contract in family court cases providing income to a spouse through the contract and for spousal and child support purposes.²³

State court judges will most commonly encounter affidavits of support in divorce proceedings where the immigrant spouse is asking the court to enforce the affidavit of support.²⁴ The affidavit of support can be used as evidence of the sponsor’s income, ability to pay child or spousal support, and the obligation of the sponsor to support his child and/or spouse. It is important for judges to know that when an affidavit of support has been filed on an immigrant’s

- A copy of the sponsor’s income tax returns for the prior three years if he or she had a legal obligation to file;²⁶
- Evidence of the sponsor’s current employment or self-employment (usually includes recent pay stubs and a statement from the sponsor’s current employer on business letterhead);²⁷ and
- If the sponsor’s income is below 125% of the poverty level for a family of that size,²⁸ the sponsor can also submit other additional evidence of his or her ability to support the immigrant family member, such as proof of the sponsor’s assets.

Only a limited number of immigrant spouses, parents, or other family members are exempt from the affidavit of support requirement.²⁹ The group of exempt immigrants that courts are most likely to encounter in family court cases, including divorce, are Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) self-petitioners. VAWA self-petitioners are abused spouses and abused children of citizens and lawful permanent residents who are eligible to file their own immigration cases without a sponsor based on having been subjected to battering or extreme cruelty by their U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse, parent, or step-parent.³⁰ Another group who are exempt are immigrants who can be credited with working forty qualifying quarters of work credit.³¹ One quarter of qualifying work is three months earning the wage needed to qualify for social security set by the Social Security Administration.³²

Calculating the Amount Owed Under an Affidavit of Support³³

A sponsor is required to provide the intending immigrant with the necessary financial support to maintain the immigrant at a minimum of 125% of the Federal Poverty Guidelines annually³⁴ until the obligations under the affidavit of support terminate. The Federal Poverty Guidelines are determined each year by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and published in the Federal Register.³⁵

The amount due each year under the affidavit of support also depends on the immigrant's household size. For example, when a citizen sponsored their immigrant spouse and stepchild for lawful permanent residency. Then during the marriage, the citizen and immigrant spouse had two more children. Not long after, the immigrant spouse separated from the citizen spouse due to domestic violence, and lived with the three children apart from the abusive citizen spouse for three years. The immigrant spouse who did not receive any income or support from the abuser for those three years filed for divorce and enforcement of the affidavit of support. For purposes of the I-864 affidavit of support, the immigrant spouse's household size would be two covering only the sponsored spouse and stepchild.³⁶ The two children born of the marriage between the immigrant and sponsoring spouse would have rights to child support that are independent of and in addition to the affidavit of support enforcement.

The court would calculate the amount due to the sponsored spouse and stepchild under the affidavit of support in the following manner. Using the federal poverty guidelines for 2021,³⁷ the poverty line for a family of two in the forty-eight contiguous states and the District of Columbia is $17,420. Under the affidavit of support, the citizen sponsor promised to maintain the immigrant spouse and stepchild at 125% poverty, which would total $21,775 for 2021. This calculation process would be repeated to determine what the sponsor owed the immigrant spouse and step-child for 2020 and 2019 resulting in an additional $21,550 owed under the affidavit of support for 2020 and $21,137 for 2019.
