SEC. 113. MANDATORY RESTITUTION FOR SEX CRIMES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

“§ 2248. Mandatory restitution

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the terms of section 3663 of this title, and in addition to any other civil or criminal penalty authorized by law, the court shall order restitution for any offense under this chapter.

“(b) SCOPE AND NATURE OF ORDER.—(1) The order of restitution under this section shall direct that—

“(A) the defendant pay to the victim the full amount of the victim’s losses as determined by the court, pursuant to paragraph (3); and

“(B) the United States Attorney enforce the restitution order by all available and reasonable means.

“(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘full amount of the victim’s losses’ includes any costs incurred by the victim for—

“(A) medical services relating to physical, psychiatric, or psychological care;

“(B) physical and occupational therapy or rehabilitation;

“(C) any income lost by the victim as a proximate result of the offense;

“(D) attorneys’ fees; and

“(E) any other losses suffered by the victim as a proximate result of the offense.

“(3) Restitution orders under this section are mandatory. A court may not decline to issue an order under this section because of—

“(A) the economic circumstances of the defendant; or

“(B) the fact that a victim has, or is entitled to, receive compensation for his or her injuries from the proceeds of insurance or any other source.

“(4)(A) Notwithstanding the terms of paragraph (3), the court may take into account the economic circumstances of the defendant in determining the manner in which and the schedule according to which the restitution is to be paid.

“(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘economic circumstances’ includes—

“(i) the financial resources and other assets of the defendant;

“(ii) projected earnings, earning capacity, and other income of the defendant; and

“(iii) any financial obligations of the defendant, including obligations to dependents.

“(C) An order under this section may direct the defendant to make a single lump-sum payment or partial payments at specified intervals. The order shall also provide that the defendant’s restitutionary obligation takes priority over any criminal fine ordered.

“(D) In the event that the victim has recovered for any amount of loss through the proceeds of insurance or any other source, the order of restitution shall provide that restitution be paid to the person who provided the compensation, but that restitution shall be paid to the victim before any restitution is paid to any other provider of compensation.

“(5) Any amount paid to a victim under this section shall be set off against any amount later recovered as compensatory damages by the victim from the defendant in—

“(A) any Federal civil proceeding; and “(B) any State civil proceeding, to the extent provided by the law of the State.

“(c) PROOF OF CLAIM.—(1) Within 60 days after conviction and, in any event, no later than 10 days prior to sentencing, the United States Attorney (or his delegee), after consulting with the victim, shall prepare and file an affidavit with the court listing the amounts subject to restitution under this section. The affidavit shall be signed by the United States Attorney (or his delegee) and the victim. Should the victim object to any of the information included in the affidavit, the United States Attorney (or his delegee) shall advise the victim that the victim may file a separate affidavit.

“(2) If no objection is raised by the defendant, the amounts attested to in the affidavit filed pursuant to subsection (1) shall be entered in the court’s restitution order. If objection is raised, the court may require the victim or the United States Attorney (or his delegee) to submit further affidavits or other supporting documents, demonstrating the victim’s losses.

“(3) If the court concludes, after reviewing the supporting documentation and considering the defendant’s objections, that there is a substantial reason for doubting the authenticity or veracity of the records submitted, the court may require additional documentation or hear testimony on those questions. Any records filed, or testimony heard, pursuant to this section, shall be in camera in the judge’s chambers. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section does not entitle the defendant to discovery of the contents of, or related to, any supporting documentation, including medical, psychological, or psychiatric records.

“(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘victim’ includes any person who has suffered direct physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of a commission of a crime under this chapter, including—

SEC. 151. SEXUAL HISTORY IN ALL CRIMINAL CASES.

The Federal Rules of Evidence are amended by inserting after rule 412 the following:

“Rule 412A. Evidence of victim’s past behavior in other criminal cases

“(a) REPUTATION AND OPINION EVIDENCE EXCLUDED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case, other than a sex offense case governed by rule 412, reputation or opinion evidence of the past sexual behavior of an alleged victim is not admissible.

“(b) ADMISSIBILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case, other than a sex offense case governed by rule 412, evidence of an alleged victim’s past sexual behavior (other than reputation and opinion evidence) may be admissible if—

“(1) the evidence is admitted in accordance with the procedures specified in subdivision (c); and

“(2) the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice.

“(c) PROCEDURES.—(1) If the defendant intends to offer evidence of specific instances of the alleged victim’s past sexual behavior, the defendant shall make a written motion to offer such evidence not later than 15 days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin, except that the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case. Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the alleged victim.

“(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At such hearing, the parties may call witnesses, including the alleged victim and offer relevant evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the defendant seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

“(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies the evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the alleged victim may be examined or cross-examined. In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance, and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.”.

Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the plaintiff.

"(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the defendant seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

"(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice, such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the plaintiff may be examined or cross-examined. In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance, and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.

TITLE III—CIVIL RIGHTS

SEC. 301. CIVIL RIGHTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

- (1) crimes motivated by the victim’s gender constitute bias crimes in violation of the victim’s right to be free from discrimination on the basis of gender;

- (3) State and Federal criminal laws do not adequately protect against the bias element of gender crimes, which separates these crimes from acts of random violence, nor do they adequately provide victims the opportunity to vindicate their interests.

(b) RIGHTS, PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.—All persons within the United States shall have the same rights, privileges and immunities in every State as is enjoyed by all other persons to be free from crimes of violence overwhelmingly motivated by the victim’s gender, as defined in subsection (d).

(c) CAUSE OF ACTION.—Any person, including a person who acts under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any State, who deprives another of the rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws as enumerated in subsection (b) shall be liable to the party injured, in an action for the recovery of compensatory and punitive damages.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, a “crime of violence overwhelmingly motivated by the victim’s gender” means any crime of violence (as that term is defined in section 16 of title 18, United States Code), including any rape, sexual assault, or abusive contact, motivated by gender.

I. PURPOSE

This legislation responds to a widespread—and growing—national problem: violence against women. To most Americans, the phrase “violence against women,” calls to mind sensational, well-publicized cases of brutality trumpeted by newspapers: “four freshmen women killed at the University of Florida,” or “a jogger brutalized by a gang on a wilding spree in central park.” But, when Chairman Biden introduced the Violence Against Women Act of 1990, he explained that “while such stories rivet our attention, we must understand that this is not a problem of one or two horrible incidents. Violent crime against women happens every day in this country—every day, every hour, every minute.”¹ In fact, every 6 minutes, a woman is raped; every 15 seconds, a woman is beaten.²

It was the minute-by-minute and day-by-day violence against women—not a single sensational story—that led to the introduction of the Violence Against Women Act of 1990. And it was the realization that the numbers of victims are growing that made swift committee consideration imperative. Over the past 10 years, the rape rate has risen 4 times as fast as the total crime rate.³ And over the past decade-and-a-half, assaults against young women have risen almost 50 percent.⁴

These facts cry out for a legislative response—a legislative response more comprehensive and more ambitious than any undertaken before to address violence against women. As Chairman Biden put it, “It is time to take on this national outrage, and it is time to deal with it and make people aware of it.”⁵ The purpose of the Violence Against Women Act of 1990 is to provide the kind of comprehensive response to violent crime that American women need today.

This legislation is targeted to help women not because of the myth that women are the weaker sex, but because many crimes affect women disproportionately and some crimes may be committed simply because of a woman’s gender. In the past, the Congress has passed specific laws to guarantee women’s right to be treated the same as other crime victims, such as the rape shield law. This legislation is built on similar principles.

Title I of the bill—the Safe Streets for Women Act—declares violence against women a major law enforcement priority, authorizing substantial resources—$300 million—to put more police officers on the street, more prosecutors in the courts, and more advocates at victims’ sides. This is a national problem and we need national resources to fight it.

This title also targets specific areas in our criminal justice system: doubling penalties for rape and aggravated rape in Federal cases; creating new evidentiary rules to shield victims from embarrassing questions about their prior sexual history in criminal and civil cases; encouraging States to pay for forensic rape exams and to pass laws to test convicted rapists for AIDS. Finally, this title increases funding for programs we know work: more lights and emergency telephones in parks and public transit, and rape prevention and education programs to attack the attitudes that nurture violence.

Title II of the bill—the Safe Homes for Women Act—confronts a growing crisis of millions of women a year who are the victims of violent crime in their own homes—what is often termed “domestic” violence. The bill protects women who flee their abusers by creating Federal penalties for spouse batterers who cross state lines and by making protective court orders issued in one state valid in the 49 others. This title also encourages States to treat domestic violence as a crime, and not as a quarrel, by encouraging states to arrest abusive spouses. Finally, title II triples Federal funding for battered women’s shelters and makes a number of improvements in existing family violence laws.

Title III—Civil Rights for Women—declares all felonies “motivated by gender” to be hate crimes entitling their victims to protection under Federal civil rights laws. Current State criminal and civil laws do not specifically prohibit or address "hate" or "bias" crimes motivated by gender. This title responds by declaring, for the first time, that gender-motivated crimes are just as much a civil rights violation as crimes motivated by race or religion.

Title IV—The Safe Campuses for Women Act—focuses on a special problem: violence against women on college campuses. This title creates new Federal incentives for rape education on college campuses and requires colleges and universities to tell rape survivors about the outcome of any disciplinary proceedings initiated against their attackers.

Title V of the bill—The Equal Justice for Women in the Courts Act—was drafted by Senator Simon to address the problems in judicial handling of cases involving violent crimes against women. It authorizes a comprehensive education program on a number of topics for both Federal and state judges.

II. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

A. INTRODUCTION AND CONSIDERATION OF S. 2754

On June 19, 1990, Chairman Biden, joined by Senators Metzbaum, Simon, and DeConcini, introduced S. 2754, the Violence Against Women Act of 1990. A companion bill, H.R. 5468, was introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative Barbara Boxer on August 3, 1990.

The Judiciary Committee held two hearings on S. 2754 during the summer of 1990. The first hearing, held on June 20, 1990, featured testimony from crime survivors and legal experts. Marla Hanson and Nancy Ziegenmeyer testified about the tragic personal costs of violence against women, and the failures of the criminal justice system's response. Other witnesses included experts on violent crimes against women: Linda Fairstein, chief of the Sex Crimes Prosecution Unit in the Manhattan District Attorney's office; and Roni Young, director of the Domestic Violence Unit, State's Attorney's Office, Baltimore, MD. Finally, Helen Neuborne, executive director of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund testified in support of the bill's civil rights remedy.

The committee held its second hearing on August 29, 1990. This hearing focused on the peculiar vulnerability of young women to serious crimes such as rape. Professor Mary Koss, a leading expert on rape, announced her new findings, showing rape figures 10 to 15 times higher than official reports, and emphasizing that the young are particularly at risk. Two young survivors of rape, Christine Shunk and Nicole Snow, testified about the personal tragedy of acquaintance rape, the vulnerability of students on college campuses, and the crimes' longlasting impact upon the victim. Other witnesses included Robin Warshaw, a researcher and author in the field, and Erica Strohl, a student advocate for campus rape prevention programs.

B. REVISION OF S. 2754

Since the introduction of S. 2754 in June, numerous individuals and organizations have reviewed the legislation and offered suggestions to improve the bill. Among the organizations and individuals who commented, and made recommendations, on the legislation were:

NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund, New York, NY;
 National Woman Abuse Prevention Project, Washington, DC;
 National Coalition Against Sexual Assault, Washington, DC;
 National Network for Victims of Sexual Assault, Arlington, VA;
 National Victim Center, Fort Worth, TX;
 Lisa G. Lerman, professor of law, Catholic University;
 National Center on Women & Family Law, Inc., New York, NY;
 Martha L. Minow, professor of law, Harvard Law School;
 Elizabeth Schneider, professor of law, Brooklyn Law School;
 Family Violence Project, San Francisco, CA; and Burt Neuborne, professor of law, New York University School of Law.

Based on suggestions from these groups and others, and after consultations with several other Senators on the committee, a modified version of S. 2754 was offered by Chairman Biden at the October 4, 1990, executive business meeting of the Judiciary Committee. Amendments to the substitute were offered by Senators Hatch and Simon. Each amendment was accepted by voice vote. The substitute was then reported favorably out of committee by voice vote.

III. DISCUSSION

Title I—Safe Streets for Women Act of 1990

A. VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN: THE SCOPE OF THE PROBLEM

No woman is immune from violent crime in this country. Of American women alive today, three out of four will be the victim of at least one violent crime. One of the most violent crimes, rape, rose four times as fast as the total national crime rate over the past 10 years.⁶ Last year, 3 to 4 million women were abused by their husbands—a number greater than the women who were married.⁷ And 1.7 million Americans have at some time faced a spouse wielding a knife or a gun.⁸

1. The gender gap in violence

Women are more vulnerable to crime today than 15 years ago—a fact that reflects a spiralling “gender gap” of violence. Since 1974, the assault rate against women has outstripped the rate for men by at least twice for some age groups and far more for others.⁹ While ⁷ National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, “The World Almanac” 839 (1989).

⁸ National Institute of Justice, “Confronting Domestic Violence: A Guide For Criminal Justice Agencies” 7 (1986).

⁹ For example, from 1974 until 1987, the rate of assaults against girls aged 12–15 (+31.41 percent) increased close to twice as much as assaults against young boys (+16.53 percent). The comparative rate for girls 16–19 was similar (+5.50 percent for girls; +2.76 percent for boys). A dramatic rise occurs in the next age group: an almost 50 percent increase for young women 20–24, compared to a 12 percent decrease for men. For women age 25–34, the rate dips slightly, down by 4.46 percent, but the male rate declined 5 times that, by 26.16 percent. For no age group is the female rate increasing less than twice the male rate. Bureau of Justice Statistics, “Criminal Victimization in the United States,” table 5 (1974); Id. Table 5 (1988).

female victimization is increasing faster than male victimization (at least for some crimes), the number of female offenders is "far outweighed" by increases in the number of male offenders. One researcher recently concluded that there is "an overwhelming concentration of male offenders in crimes of violence."¹⁰

The young are bearing the brunt of this "gender gap." While young women are being attacked today at a rate 50 percent greater than in 1974, young men are being attacked less often, by 12 percent.¹¹ While rape rates are increasing, it is the young who are at the greatest risk: women aged 16 to 19 are the most likely to be raped.¹² According to one study, close to half a million girls now attending high school will be raped before they graduate.¹³

2. Government figures underestimate violence

Official statistics on crimes against women—numbers issued by the FBI and the Bureau of Justice Statistics—are disturbing enough when they tell us that a woman is raped every 6 minutes in this country. But testimony before the committee by one expert revealed that the official statistics may actually underestimate the true incidence and prevalence of rape in this country.

We have known for some time that rape is an underreported crime. Linda Fairstein, head of the Manhattan sex crimes unit, testified that sexual assaults "remain the most underreported cases within the criminal justice system."¹⁴ For that reason, "it is almost certain that the national estimate of * * * rapes and rape attempts * * * understates the total number."¹⁵ Until now, however, we had no idea of how much the official numbers underestimate the problem.

Testimony by Dr. Mary Koss, on behalf of the American Psychological Association, showed that official rape rates may be as much as 10-15 times too low.¹⁶ According to Dr. Koss, "[Government] data create a false picture of rape." While official data suggest rape is a "rare" crime, "a large body of research * * * indicates that substantial numbers of rapes are occurring that the [Government estimates] fail[] to detect."¹⁷

Dr. Koss and other witnesses focused attention not only on the extent of the rape problem in this country, but also on the special and growing problem of "acquaintance rape." Many people incorrectly believe that "real rape" only happens when "strangers jump out of bushes" and attack unsuspecting victims and that rape by someone the victim knows—rape by an acquaintance—is somehow less serious than "stranger rape."¹⁸

¹⁸ As one researcher has noted, it may be easier for us to think of rape as a crime by strangers because then we can "distance ourselves" to "see it as irrelevant to [our] lives." L. Bourque, "Defining Rape" 286 (1989).

The testimony of several witnesses, including victims, made clear that these attitudes must change. Women raped by strangers and women raped by acquaintances experience their rapes as "equally violent"—"the victims were equally likely to have feared serious injury or think that they might die."¹⁹ Even official statistics acknowledge that there is a serious acquaintance rape problem: 46 percent of rapes, according to the Justice Department, are committed by persons the victim knows.²⁰

Some have suggested that Dr. Koss's findings exaggerate rape numbers. But hers is only one of several independent studies concluding that "official" figures are seriously too low. For instance, a 1984 study found that rapes occur seven times more often than according to "official" sources.²¹ Further, another rape researcher, Dr. Dean Kilpatrick, testified recently before a House committee that "virtually all rape experts agree that the NCS (National Crime survey) estimates of the number of rape cases are substantially inaccurate and low."²²

The rape statistics provided to the committee may reflect a number of factors, including the public's increased appreciation for the special problem of "acquaintance rape." The committee also notes that the Department of Justice has stated that it has recently revised the way it conducts its rape survey to obtain a more accurate figure. The new survey will be phased in over the next three years.²³

3. The individual and societal cost

Violence against women takes a devastating toll on individuals and on society. The personal impact is, no doubt, difficult for many to appreciate. But, unless we try, we will have lost an important dimension of the problem. The committee was urged by those who had survived not to "define rape without some consideration of the trauma experienced by the victim."²⁴

An assault may be over in moments, but felt for a lifetime. Nancy Ziegenmeyer, an Iowa housewife and rape survivor, explained to the committee, "the person that I was on the morning of November 19, 1988, was taken from me and my family. I will never be the same for the rest of my life."²⁵ Christine Shunk, a paralegal and victim of two brutal attacks explained that she did not know if she could possibly survive a third—"You see, being raped is like having your whole world turned upside down. You suddenly lose control over your body and self-esteem. You have no power. It does not matter where you are, you cannot escape."²⁶ And Marla

Hanson, the victim of a brutal slashing attack, explained how her career was lost, and her life changed: it was not a matter of the scars which would heal; she lost her modelling career because no one wanted to photograph a face that represented "violence."²⁷

If the cost to the individual is grave, the cost to society is staggering. It is not a simple matter of adding up medical costs, or law enforcement costs, but of adding up all those expenses plus the costs of lost careers, decreased productivity, foregone educational opportunities, and long-term health problems. Partial estimates show that violent crime against women costs this country at least 3 billion—not million, but billion—dollars a year.²⁸

4. Double victimization: violent crime, attitudes, and the criminal justice system

During the past 20 years, many sincere efforts have been launched to assist victims of crime and, in particular, victims of rape and domestic violence. Rape laws now focus on the defendant's acts rather than the victim's behavior. Sex crimes units and domestic crimes units have sprouted in major metropolitan areas. Localities have provided "victim" assistance to guide survivors through the court process.

But the promise of these changes has not always been realized.²⁹ It is still easier to convict a car thief than a rapist.³⁰ Victims are still being asked irrelevant and harassing questions about their prior sexual history in assault and kidnapping cases.³¹ And, in one witness's opinion, rape is still underreported and underprosecuted.³²

Unfortunately, a disturbing aspect of gender crimes is how survivors often suffer from a sense of "double victimization"—victimization first by the attacker and, second, by society. More than one witness explained to the committee that "the system" is often an alien environment, contributing less to their assistance than to their sense of revictimization.³³

As one witness put it: "[I]t never occurred to me to blame myself for my own attack; that is, until the courts, the press and society began to insinuate and to question if I were the architect of my Kruttschnitt, "Gender and Interpersonal Violence" (paper prepared for the National Academy of Sciences, 1990) ("women are generally reluctant to report many types of assaults, especially sexual assaults . . . This reluctance appears to stem from, among other factors, fear as to how the 'system' will treat them in their role as victims").

own suffering.”³⁴ Another wrote: “if the system continues to badger and blame women for the crimes they experience, it will not be long before we say, ‘what’s the point?’”³⁵

To some extent, this sense of “double victimization” is a sad, but inevitable, byproduct of a criminal justice system in which cases are brought in the name of the State, not the victim. Even so, the testimony suggested that there are ways to reduce its impact. Added resources for prosecutors, court advocates, and judicial training can help and so can new rules to protect victims from irrelevant and embarrassing courtroom experiences.

While these efforts may provide some relief, there is reason to believe that the sense of “double victimization” will only end when attitudes about violent crimes against women have changed. Testimony before the committee suggested that, despite improvement, negative attitudes toward crimes against women are still present in our criminal justice systems. Jurors may refuse to convict a defendant because of what the victim was wearing, such as a lace miniskirt.³⁶ Defense lawyers pursue questions about a victim’s prior sexual history, even in cases of simple assault.³⁷

This may reflect more general societal attitudes. One researcher reports that “[s]ubstantial numbers of persons across the nation use technically irrelevant, extra-evidentiary information to decide whether a rape occurred or find it difficult to call any sexual assault rape.”³⁸ Another study found that two-thirds of 1,000 people surveyed believed that rape could be “provoked by women’s behavior or appearance”; one-third felt that women should be held responsible for “preventing their own rape”; and 11 percent placed the blame for the rape on women by indicating that “If a woman was raped, she was asking for it.”³⁹ Finally, there is evidence that such attitudes may be prevalent even among the very young. In one study of teenage boys and girls, students were asked if it was “OK to force sex” on a girl if the boy spent $10 or more on her. Nearly one-fourth of the boys agreed, but so did nearly one-fifth of the girls.⁴⁰

B. THE LEGISLATIVE RESPONSE: SAFE STREETS FOR WOMEN

This is the background that led the Committee, under the direction of Chairman Biden, to consider the first comprehensive package of legislation targeting violent crimes against women. As Chairman Biden stated, in opening the first hearing on S. 2754, "if we don't prioritize this crime against women, it's going to get worse, and we can't afford for it to get much worse."⁴¹

Title I of the Act—the Safe Streets for Women Act—signals that crimes against women must be taken "seriously" as a law enforcement priority. First, it insures that States will have the kind of resources necessary to step up police protection, prosecution, and conviction: $300 million is targeted both for "high intensity" crime areas, and underserved populations in rural and suburban America. The funds may be used to combat all crimes against women, including sexual assault and domestic violence. And, to insure a coordinated community response, monies are contingent on participation by local victim advocate groups.

Title I also responds to a number of the specific problems in the criminal justice system identified by testimony before the committee. First, it makes significant improvements in the Federal system's response to crimes against women, increasing the penalties for rape and aggravated rape, expanding existing evidentiary protections to insure that no crime victim will be subjected to harassing questions about her prior sexual history, and adding new protections to bar the use of a victim's clothing to show that she incited or invited a rape.

Second, the bill encourages certain essential State law reforms. Right now, some States require victims to pay for their own rape exams, even though victims generally do not pay for any other evidence necessary to convict their attackers. To obtain funds under this bill, States must pass laws that require payment for forensic rape exams. Similarly, too few States recognize the special risks of the AIDS virus for rape victims. To encourage laws that permit testing for AIDS at the request of the victim, the bill provides that States without such laws will lose 10 percent of funds provided under the bill.

Third, this title takes simple, but necessary, measures to insure that women can travel safely in public parks and on public transit. Existing funding is earmarked to put more lights and security cameras in bus stops and adjacent parking lots, in national parks, state parks, and subway stations.

Finally, this title recognizes that we cannot effectively combat violent crimes against women unless we begin to change the kind of attitudes that nurture violence. Accordingly, it authorizes a twentyfold increase in funding for rape prevention and education, as early as junior high school.⁴² These much needed funds will help volunteer organizations like rape crisis centers and battered women's shelters, that currently devote their meager budgets to repairing individuals' shattered lives, to reach out to share their wisdom and expertise with the community.

Title II—Safe Homes For Women Act of 1990

A. VIOLENCE BEHIND CLOSED DOORS: SPOUSE ABUSE

If the number of violent crimes against women on the street, in parks, and in public transit daunt us, the number of violent crimes in the home should stun. Three to 4 million American women a year are victims of felonious assaults in the home. These crimes have, for too long, been hidden "behind closed doors."⁴³ The Nation must recognize, as a whole, that these crimes should be taken just as seriously as any other assault.

In nineteenth century America, courts drew a curtain around the home, refusing to intervene in cases of spouse abuse.⁴⁴ Some courts even sanctioned the "salutary restraint of domestic discipline" but applied the "rule of thumb" limiting "chastisement" to a stick no bigger than a man's thumb.⁴⁵ Up until as late as 15 years ago, many jurisdictions refused to arrest and prosecute spouse abusers, even though a comparable assault on the street by a stranger would have led to a lengthy jail term.⁴⁶

1. A crime, not just a quarrel

The term "domestic violence" may sound tame, but the behavior it describes is far from gentle. Statistics present a chilling picture of just how serious—indeed even lethal—spouse abuse may be. Between 2,000 and 4,000 women die every year from abuse.⁴⁷ Every day, four women are killed by their male partners and, in many of those cases, the homicides are the culmination of repeated, but lesser, abuse.⁴⁸ One-third of all domestic violence cases, if reported, would be classified by police as felony rape, robbery, or aggravated assault; the remaining two-thirds involve bodily injury at least as serious as the injury inflicted in 90 percent of all robberies and aggravated assaults.⁴⁹

Unlike other crimes, spouse abuse is "chronic" violence. It is persistent intimidation and repeated physical injury. Absent intervention "one can almost guarantee that the same woman will be assaulted again and again by the same man."⁵⁰ One study showed that, over a 6-month period following a domestic violence incident, one-third of the victims will be subject to another rape, robbery, aggravated or simple assault.⁵¹ And this chronic abuse often escalates. One study showed that in over half of all murders of wives by their husbands, police had been called to the residence five times in the previous year to investigate a domestic violence complaint.⁵²

(1 Walker) 156 (1824) (applying rule permitting husbands "who might think proper to use a whip or rattan, no bigger than my thumb, in order to enforce the salutary restraints of domestic discipline"); State v. Rhodes, 61 N.C. 445 (1868) (upholding, on other grounds, decision of lower court that "His Honor was of opinion that the defendant had a right to whip his wife with a switch no larger than his thumb, and that upon the facts found in the special verdict he was not guilty in law").

Spouse abuse is serious, it is chronic, and it is a problem national in scope. The 3 to 4 million women abused each year are not located in any one area, among any one socio-economic group, or from any particular race, ethnic or religious group. The common perception that battering affects only poor, uneducated, and minority populations, is simply incorrect. No American community and no American family is immune.⁵³

2. The costs of chronic violence

The costs of domestic violence must be measured in the lives and health of American women. According to the Surgeon General, battering "is the single largest cause of injury to women in the United States."⁵⁴ Over 1 million women in the United States seek medical assistance each year for injuries sustained by their husbands or other partners.⁵⁵ As many as 20 percent of hospital emergency room cases are related to wife battering.⁵⁶

But the costs do not end there: woman abuse has "a devastating social and economic impact on the family and the community."⁵⁷ It takes its toll in the systematic destruction of lives of the entire family. In homes where there is domestic violence, children are abused or seriously neglected at a rate 1500 percent higher than the national average.⁵⁸ It takes its toll in homelessness: one study reports that as many as 50 percent of homeless women and children are fleeing domestic violence.⁵⁹ It takes its toll in employee absenteeism and sick time for women who either cannot leave their homes or are afraid to show the physical effects of the violence.⁶⁰

3. The need for a Federal response from Democrats and Republicans, has hailed the growing problem of spouse abuse, decrying this "epidemic," and "leading" national health problem.⁶¹ Despite these outcries, little concrete assistance has materialized. A recent report prepared for the Ford Foundation states that Federal support is seriously lacking and that funding for domestic violence is "minuscule."⁶²

This indictment is particularly damning because many existing federal reports acknowledge that there are ways to stop this chronic violence. One of the most important ways is to take domestic violence seriously—to treat it like any other criminal assault. Arrest can stop abuse: police intervention may lead to as much as 62 percent fewer subsequent assaults, whether or not the abuser is actually convicted.⁶³ Similarly, prosecution, with or without victim cooperation, can stop abuse. When one community instituted a policy to encourage prosecutors to sign domestic violence complaints—as they do for every other violent crime—complaints increased by over 100 percent.⁶⁴ Finally, proper judicial treatment of domestic violence can stop abuse: incarceration of repeat offenders, even for a limited period of time, is a significant deterrent to repeated abuse.⁶⁵

The good news is that, by 1990, significant legal reforms are in place in many States. To counteract the historical presumption against arrest in domestic violence cases, many States have enacted legislation that encourages arrest and some States even require or mandate arrest of spouse abusers. Battered women also have new legal tools: 48 States have what are known as "civil protection" orders—orders that require an abusing spouse to "stay away" and cease violent behavior. These orders are typically easier to obtain than a criminal conviction and their violation may amount to a misdemeanor or require arrest.⁶⁶

The bad news, unfortunately, is that both despite and because of these welcome legal reforms, there remains much to be done. First, law reform has not always produced results. Arrests are now authorized, but arrest rates may be as low as 1 for every 100 domestic assaults.⁶⁷ Communities may change their policies, but implementation does not follow. The Nation's capital is a case in point: while police protocols tell officers to arrest in domestic violence situations, one study showed that arrests were made in only 5 percent of all cases, and less than 15 percent of cases where the victim was bleeding from wounds.⁶⁸ Isolated success stories—like a program in Duluth, Minnesota that drastically reduced domestic violence rates—have not been replicated with any consistency in other communities. And, finally, novel legal remedies, such as the civil protection order, may suffer because of “widespread lack of enforcement.”⁶⁹

Progress has also created a whole host of new problems. For example, increased authority to arrest and prosecute spouse abusers now strains already overextended police, prosecutors, and courts. In 1987, New York State police dealt with 73,000 family offenses, almost double the number only 3 years before.⁷⁰ Arrests tripled in Connecticut after a mandatory arrest law was passed.⁷¹ Not surprisingly, courts and prosecutors are overwhelmed. In Baltimore, two prosecutors and two paralegals provided services to 7,000 victims in 2 years.⁷² In Chicago, a doubling of criminal cases swamped the two existing domestic violence courts and required the opening of a third court.⁷³

The need for shelter further strains States’ already limited resources. For a number of women, their only hope of escape is a shelter. But the need for such shelter is chronic and widespread: in one Philadelphia program, three out of every four women are turned away; in Seattle, there are 500 arrests for battering per month, but only 39 beds for battered women; in New York, one program turns away approximately 100 battered women per week. It is shameful, but this society has invested more in our pets than our wives: there are three times as many animal shelters as shelters harboring battered women.⁷⁴

B. TAKING DOMESTIC VIOLENCE SERIOUSLY: SAFE HOMES FOR WOMEN

National leadership on domestic violence is sorely needed, and title II of the Violence Against Women Act was created to provide that leadership. It is built on the philosophy that spouse abuse must be treated just as seriously as any other violent crime. Existing federal statutes skirt the problem, treating domestic violence as a “health” issue, a “shelter” issue, or a “crime victim compensation” issue.⁷⁵ These are all important dimensions of the problem, but they do nothing to acknowledge that the Federal Government believes this is a “criminal justice” priority.

First, title II creates a Federal spouse abuse remedy. Unless, and until, the Federal Government recognizes its criminal responsibilities in this area, there can be no national leadership on this issue. As a general rule, States are primarily responsible for criminal laws. But the Federal Government plays an important role by closing loopholes created by the division of criminal law responsibilities among the States. Title II fills an existing gap by creating Federal penalties for abusers who cross state lines to continue abuse and by making protective court orders issued in one State valid in the 49 others.

Second, title II recognizes that the Federal Government needs to provide more resources to fight the domestic violence problem. For fiscal year 1989, appropriations for domestic violence totalled $8.5 million, just over 1 percent of the cost of a single B-2 bomber. Title II authorizes $125 million for domestic violence funding, including $75 million—triple current authorizations—for battered women's shelters. Coupled with law enforcement funds available for domestic violence under title I, this amount should provide much-needed Federal assistance in this area.

Third, title II provides significant incentives to encourage States to treat domestic violence as a serious crime. The act includes two different incentive programs. For States suffering from strain on their systems in responding to increased arrests, the bill provides additional assistance to centralize and systematize the process. For other States seeking a more dramatic solution, this title creates a "model State" program, encouraging comprehensive reform in arrest, prosecution, and judicial policies.

Title III—Civil Rights for Women

Government has a "responsibility to treat each citizen's fate as equally important."⁷⁶ This is nowhere more true than when a citizen's physical security is at stake. The Violence Against Women Act treats crimes motivated by gender as important enough to deserve federal civil rights protection. This title declares, for the first time, that assaults overwhelmingly motivated by gender are a violation of the victim's civil rights, just as are assaults motivated by a victim's race or religion.

Congress has the power, and obligation, to recognize that violence motivated by gender "is not merely an individual crime or a personal injury, but is a form of discrimination."⁷⁷ With the passage of title VII, Congress recognized an important federal interest in battling gender discrimination and acted to bar that discrimination in the workplace. The Violence Against Women Act recognizes that gender discrimination may not only take the form of a lost pay raise or promotion, but also a violent attack.

A. CONGRESS' OBLIGATION TO REMEDY VIOLENT DISCRIMINATION

The American legal system has always treated an assault committed on the street by a stranger as a serious criminal offense that should yield a serious jail term. But when the assault is gender-motivated, and it takes place in the home or is sexual in nature, the criminal justice system, in many instances, has not recognized the crime or has refused to believe its victims. Up until the end of the last century, assaults in the home were not only ignored, ⁷⁶ R. Dworkin, "Law's Empire" at 296 (1986).

⁷⁷ Written testimony of Helen Neuborne, submitted to the Senate Judiciary Committee (June 20, 1990).

they were effectively condoned by many courts.⁷⁸ And sexual assault complaints were long viewed with skepticism: victims were required to produce corroborating witnesses or demonstrate "utmost resistance" to justify a criminal sanction.⁷⁹

Despite much reform, witnesses explained to the committee that vestiges of this legal discrimination remain.⁸⁰ Well-intentioned law reforms have failed, in many cases, to stop jurors from applying the same requirements that the legislature has just pronounced irrelevant.⁸¹ And recent studies indicate that gender bias affects judges, prosecutors and court employees.⁸²

The Violence Against Women Act cannot rectify all of these problems, but it can take a very important step in taking seriously crimes motivated by gender. As one witness testified: "Perhaps the most constructive role that the Federal Government can play in the effort to combat crimes against women is to enact legislation recognizing that violence motivated by gender is a violation of civil rights."⁸³

Title III makes a national commitment to condemn crimes motivated by gender in just the same way that we have made a national commitment to condemn crimes motivated by race or religion. It provides a civil rights remedy in the tradition of sections 1981, 1983, and 1985(3). It permits a victim of a crime motivated by gender to sue in Federal court for compensatory and punitive damages. Not every injury motivated by gender is covered: the incident must amount to a "crime of violence" as defined in title 18, including but not limited to, any felony sexual assault, rape, or other attack, and must be overwhelmingly motivated by gender.

B. THE NEED FOR A CIVIL RIGHTS REMEDY

Hearings on this legislation sparked some debate about the need for, and the wisdom of, a civil rights remedy. Doubts were voiced about whether the remedy would serve any real deterrent purpose—that it would "do nothing" to solve the problem. And questions were raised about whether the remedy was needed when state law already provides criminal and civil penalties for assault and rape.

⁷⁸ See State v. Rhodes, 61 N.C. 445 (1868) (upholding, on other grounds, decision of lower court that "His Honor was of opinion that the defendant had a right to whip his wife with a switch no larger than his thumb, and that upon the facts, found in the special verdict he was not guilty in law"); see Thompson v. Thompson, 218 U.S. 611 (1910) (denying right of wife to maintain action against her husband for assault and battery based on common law theory of the unity of husband and wife).

⁸³ Written testimony of Helen Neuborne, submitted to the Senate Judiciary Committee (June 20, 1990).

This remedy will accomplish much for the victims of gender-based attack. First, it puts another legal tool in victim's hands to call their attacker to account. Testimony before the committee shows that such remedies are important because they allow survivors an opportunity for legal vindication that the survivor, not the State, controls.⁸⁴ Second, a civil remedy offers decided advantages over criminal sanctions: the plaintiff may call the attacker to the witness stand to account for his behavior and need only prove the offense by a preponderance of the evidence; in a criminal case the defendant may remain silent and is proven guilty only "beyond a reasonable doubt." Third, a Federal remedy offers victims the best court system in the world with judges insulated from local political pressures and the power to screen out jurors who harbor irrational prejudices against, for example, rape victims.

The civil rights remedy included in this bill does not duplicate State law. Criminal laws are intended to vindicate the State's interest in the protection of its citizens, not the victim's interest in equal treatment. Moreover, there is strong reason to doubt the efficacy, for many victims, of criminal remedies for crimes most likely to be gender-motivated, such as rape. Many of those crimes are never reported, fewer are prosecuted, and even fewer result in a conviction.⁸⁵

Similarly, State civil laws are not focused on the discriminatory aspect of gender-motivated crime. Civil assault and battery laws are not intended to remedy discrimination and fitting gender-motivated crimes into common-law categories may prove difficult because tort remedies typically focus on physical injuries, not the deprivation of an individual's civil rights. For example, although there are over 100,000 rapes a year in this country, there were only 255 civil jury trials arising from sexual assaults over a ten year period.⁸⁶ This statistic is not intended to suggest intentional failures by states to enforce or pass civil laws to protect victims, but simply reflects the fact that state tort law was never intended to protect individuals' civil rights.

The civil rights remedy included in this bill does provide victims of gender-motivated crimes with a meaningful new remedy. Moreover, it says that we as a nation will not tolerate this kind of discrimination—that no member of society should be subject to a crime just because of their gender.

C. CONGRESS' POWER TO REMEDY VIOLENT DISCRIMINATION

The Supreme Court has held that violent gender-based assaults may constitute gender discrimination within the scope of title VII, 42 U.S.C. 200e et seq. Meritor Savings Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57 (1986). Title III's civil rights provision makes explicit what the Court has already held: that an assault against a woman simply because she is a woman is no different than an assault against a black person because that person is black. It is a "form of discrimination—an assault on a publicly shared ideal of equality."⁸⁷

Congress' power to remedy this kind of discrimination stems from the same constitutional sources that underpin other antidiscrimination legislation: the commerce clause, the fourteenth amendment, the right to travel, and other rights protected by the privileges and immunities clause. Gender-based crimes and the fear of gender-based crimes restricts movement, reduces employment opportunities, increases health expenditures, and reduces consumer spending, all of which affect interstate commerce and the national economy. Gender-based crimes and women's fears of those crimes also restrict the enjoyment of federally protected rights like the right to employment, the right to public accommodations, and the right to travel. Finally, gender-based crimes violate our most fundamental notions of equality—that no person's physical security should be at risk because of an immutable trait, because of race, religion, or gender.

In closing, the committee emphasizes that the civil rights remedy provided in the bill is not intended to cover any and all gender-based discrimination. It is limited to gender-based discrimination that results in a crime of violence, and it is limited to crimes of violence proven to be overwhelmingly motivated by gender.

Title IV—Safe Campuses for Women

A. THE SPECIAL PROBLEM OF CAMPUS VIOLENCE

Hearings on S. 2754 revealed a special problem of violence, a problem that affects young women on campus. Those women are at the greatest risk for the most violent of crimes—rape. More college women will be raped this school year than will be struck by any other major crime. Unfortunately, little attention has been paid to this problem. Universities have strong incentives to minimize the campus crime problem, and college victims' youth and inexperience often lead them to hide their encounter with violence.

Recent studies show a startlingly high number of women students victimized by rapists. One witness testified that in a study of 32 colleges across the country, she found that a woman in college has a 1-in-13 chance of being raped in a given year. Applying that figure nationally, one finds that 125,000 college women can expect to be raped during this—or any—year.⁸⁸

Few students will ever report those crimes. For example, while campus studies suggest that 1,275 women were raped at America's three largest universities in 1989, only three of those rapes were reported to police.⁸⁹ In light of such statistics, it is not surprising to learn that less than 5 percent of college women report their rapes to the police. In fact, according to one report, nearly half of the women who are raped in college tell no one of their victimization.⁹⁰

Rape is truly a horrible crime for any woman, but its devastation is often magnified for young women attending college. College women are not only at risk demographically (acquaintance rape happens most frequently among those between the ages of 15 and 24), but they are at risk psychologically and educationally. Rape may not only cost a young woman "her confidence and trust, but it may also cost her her very education."⁹¹ Freshman women are the easiest targets, and have the most to lose: it is not unusual for these women to drop out of school altogether.⁹² And, even if a woman does not drop out, she may feel it necessary to interrupt her college career simply to avoid her attacker. Indeed, one witness testified before the committee that her college counselor's only advice to her, after a rape, was to "keep your grades up" so she could transfer to a different school.⁹³

B. THE LEGISLATIVE RESPONSE: SAFE CAMPUSES FOR WOMEN

Title IV of the Violence Against Women Act responds by calling for the first federal program for college rape education and prevention. Qualifying programs would include educational seminars, peer-to-peer counseling, self-defense courses, the installation and operation of hotlines, the preparation of information materials, and any other effort that would increase campus awareness of the facts about, or that would help prevent, sexual assault. To alleviate the financial burden, the bill provides $10 million in grant monies to the neediest institutions.

This title also protects college rape victims' right to know the fate of their attackers. Higher Education Act privacy restrictions now inhibit universities from disclosing the outcome of campus disciplinary proceedings brought against alleged rapists. This title permits colleges to inform victims of the disciplinary fate of their attackers. Only if the victim learns of the outcome of these proceedings will she know whether her attacker will be in class the next day; only if she knows will she be able to pursue other civil or criminal remedies.

Title V—Equal Justice for Women in the Courts Act

The final title of the Violence Against Women Act—the Equal Justice in Courts Act—was sponsored by Senator Simon and included as an amendment to the original bill. This title focuses on training for judges about violent crimes against women. It provides training to both State and local judges on a number of issues, including sexual assault and domestic violence. Training covers the nature and incidence of rape; the application of rape shield laws; the reasons victims do not report crimes of domestic violence and sexual assault; and the economic and psychological effects of these crimes. Training curricula must be developed in conjunction with a broad array of experts, including law enforcement officials, volunteer victim advocates, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and other legal experts.

IV. VOTE OF THE COMMITTEE

On October 4, 1990, the Committee on the Judiciary by voice vote approved an amendment in the nature of a substitute by Senator Biden, along with amendments by Senators Hatch and Simon. The committee ordered the bill, the Violence Against Women Act of 1990, as amended, favorably reported.

V. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—SAFE STREETS FOR WOMEN ACT

Subtitle A—Federal penalties for sex crimes

This subtitle increases Federal penalties for rape, aggravated rape, and repeated sex offenses.

Section 101. Short title: This section provides the short title of Title I, the "Safe Streets for Women Act of 1990."

Section 111. Repeat offenders: This section doubles penalties for repeat sex offenders. A person who has already been convicted of a crime under chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is subject to a penalty of up to twice the existing penalty, based on new guidelines to be promulgated by the Sentencing Commission.

Section 112. Federal penalties: This section doubles existing penalties for rape and aggravated rape. Under current law, the Sentencing Commission has set the base level rape sentence at 6 years and the base level aggravated rape sentence at 9 years. This section directs that the Sentencing Commission establish guidelines or revise existing guidelines to double existing rape penalties.

Section 113. Mandatory restitution for sex crimes: This section requires sex offenders to pay costs incurred by victims as a proximate result of a sex crime. Under current law, a court may, but is not required to, order "restitution" or the payment of costs incurred. Often, it is simply assumed that the defendant does not, and will never have, the resources to pay the victims' costs. This section reverses those assumptions, requiring the court to order the defendant to pay the victims' expenses. The defendant's resources are not relevant to the plaintiff's entitlement to a restitution award or the amount of the award, but only the method of payment. The restitution order is not intended to become a separate civil proceeding; streamlined procedures are provided that insure fairness both to the victim and the defendant.

Subtitle B—Law enforcement and prosecution grants to reduce violent crimes against women

This subtitle creates two grant programs attacking violent crimes against women. Part A targets $200 million in funds to the 40 most dangerous areas in the country for women. Part B provides $100 million for each of the 50 States, with each State receiving at least $500,000.

Section 121. Grants to combat violent crimes against women: This section amends Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) to provide grants to combat violent crimes against women. The purpose of the new grants is to assist States, cities, and other localities to develop effective law enforcement and prosecution strategies to combat violent crimes against women and, in particular, to focus efforts on those areas with the highest rates of violent crime against women.

Subpart 1 grants target the 40 most dangerous areas in the country for women. The Justice Department is directed to create a list of those areas and publish the list in the Federal Register not less than 45 days after the bill's enactment. To collect this data, the Bureau of Justice Statistics need not conduct a new victimization survey, but may rely upon existing data for reported crimes gathered by cities, States, or the FBI.

Subpart 2 grants are general monies available to any State. Each State is entitled to a minimum $500,000, with the remaining $75 million divided among the States based on the State's population.

Under either subpart, grants must be used for specified purposes, including training for police and prosecutors; expanding or creating units of police or prosecutors focusing on crimes against women; developing protocols for police and prosecutors on the handling of domestic violence and sexual assault cases; developing or expanding computer systems to track complaints; and boosting resources for victim services programs. Any qualifying fund recipient must certify that grant monies will be used for three of the five purposes outlined in this section.

To qualify for funds under this section, grantees must comply with certain statutory conditions. First, grantees must certify that programs will be coordinated with local volunteer service agencies, such as rape crisis centers and battered women's shelters. Second, States seeking general grants must have in place laws that provide for AIDs testing of convicted rapists at the request of the victim, or lose 10 percent of the State's general grant. Third, any grantee seeking funds under this section or any other title I program must have in place laws or policies that require the State, not the victim, to pay for forensic rape exams. (See section 162 below).

Subtitle C—Safety for women in public transit and public parks

This subtitle targets existing funds to add lighting, camera surveillance, and security phones in national and state parks.

Section 131. Grants for capital improvements to prevent crime in public transportation: This section authorizes the use of existing public transit funds to target crime, including crimes against women. It amends the Urban Mass Transportation Act to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to use $10 million in mass transit funds to increase lighting, camera surveillance and emergency telephones in bus stops, subway stations, or adjacent parking lots. The Federal share for these capital improvement projects shall be 90 percent.

Section 132. Grants for capital improvements to prevent crime in national parks: This section authorizes the use of existing national park funds to target crime, including crimes against women. It amends the National Park System Improvements in Administration Act (16 U.S.C. 1a et seq.) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allocate $10 million for Federal assistance to reduce violent crime in the National Park system. Funds are to be allocated to the areas most in need of assistance, with priority granted to those areas with high rates of sexual assault, as determined by the chief official responsible for law enforcement within the National Park Service.

Section 133. Grants for capital improvements to prevent crime in public parks. This section authorizes the use of existing state park funds to target crime, including crimes against women. It amends the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allocate $15 million from the Land and Water Conservation Fund for Federal assistance to reduce violent crime in State parks. Funds are to be allocated to the neediest areas, with a priority given to urban parks and recreation areas with the highest rates of crime.

Subtitle D—National commission on violent crime against women

Section 141. Establishment: This section creates a national commission to study the Nation's response to violent crimes against women and for making recommendations on how to reduce crimes against women.

Section 142. Duties of commission: This section specifies the duties of the commission. Among the topics to be studied by the commission are: the need for more uniform State laws on domestic violence and sexual assault, the adequacy of current data on violent crimes against women, and the need for national educational and awareness efforts.

Section 143. Membership: Five members are to be chosen by the President, three of whom shall be the Attorney General, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The remaining ten members are to be chosen by the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate and the House of Representatives and should include representatives from a broad cross-section of interested parties, including persons with expertise in law enforcement, prosecution, victim advocacy, judicial administration, and other legal and constitutional issues.

Sections 144-48. These sections require a commission report, provide for an executive director and staff, authorize appropriations, and terminate the commission after 1 year.

Subtitle E—New evidentiary rules

This subtitle creates 3 new Federal Rules of Evidence. Congress has plenary power to make such changes and has exercised that power in the past by enacting rule 12, the Federal rape shield law, on which the new rules in this section are based.

Section 151. Sexual history in criminal cases: This section applies the principles of the rape shield law to all criminal cases, not just the sex assault cases where current rule 412 applies. It creates a new evidentiary rule, rule 412A, governing all criminal cases brought under title 18, United States Code. Subsection (a) of new rule 412A, bars reputation and opinion evidence of past sexual behavior in all criminal cases, tracking the same language that now governs reputation and opinion evidence in rule 412. The only difference is that rule 412A applies to all criminal cases, not just the sex assault cases currently covered by rule 412.

Subsection (b) provides that evidence of specific instances of a victim's past sexual behavior is admissible if the evidence is relevant and its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect. However, such evidence is only admissible if it is offered in accordance with the procedures outlined in subsection (c), procedures that are similar to those governing the admissibility of evidence under the current rape shield rule, rule 412.

Subsection (c) provides that, in ruling on an offer of proof, the court should articulate the reasoning processes that led it to conclude that the evidence was relevant and probative given the potential for the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.

Section 152. Sexual history in civil cases: This section extends the principles of Rule 412A to civil claims of actionable sexual misconduct. It creates a new evidentiary rule, rule 412B, that governs the use of prior sexual history in cases involving claims of sex harassment and discrimination brought pursuant to title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e) and gender bias claims brought pursuant to title III of this act. Like rule 412A, this rule bars the use of reputation or opinion evidence of prior sexual history. Also like rule 412A, this rule provides that prior sexual history shall be admitted only if relevant and only if its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect. The procedures for offering potentially admissible evidence in this rule are identical to those in rule 412A.

Section 153. Amendments to the rape shield law: This section makes three amendments to the existing rape shield law, rule 412. First, it codifies existing law permitting a victim to take an interlocutory appeal of an adverse ruling under the rape shield law. Second, it provides for the rare case in which a victim may want to introduce evidence of prior sexual history (or a lack thereof), clarifying that a victim may waive the rule's protections. Third, rule 412's procedures are conformed to those included in new rules 412A and 412B.

Section 154. Evidence of clothing: This section provides that evidence of clothing may not be admitted to show that a victim incited or invited a rape. Nothing in this section is intended to bar the use of clothing when it is relevant to an issue in the case such as injury or identity.

Subtitle F—Assistance to victims of sexual assault

Section 161. Education and prevention grants to reduce sexual assaults against women: This subtitle authorizes a twenty-fold increase in rape prevention and education funding, from $3.5 million to $65 million. Funds are to be provided to volunteer nonprofit service providers, such as rape crisis centers. At least 15 percent of funds must be allocated for education of junior high school and high school students on rape prevention.

Section 162. Rape exam payments: Grantees seeking any title I funds must provide payment for forensic rape exams. To meet this requirement, it is preferable that States or localities reimburse hospitals, not victims, for the expense of the exam. However, it is sufficient that a State or locality reimburse the victim after the fact if the reimbursement scheme requires prompt payment (within 90 days), provides information about reimbursement to the victim at the time of the exam, permits applications for reimbursement for up to 1 year after the date of the exam, and includes no minimum loss or deductible.

TITLE II—SAFE HOMES FOR WOMEN ACT

Subtitle A—Interstate enforcement

Section 201. Short title: This section provides the short title of Title II, the “Safe Homes for Women Act of 1990.”

Section 211. Interstate enforcement: This section creates a new chapter in the Criminal Code to punish spouse abusers who cross State lines to continue abuse. To fill existing gaps in State law, two substantive criminal offenses are created. First, any person who travels across State lines and who injures his or her spouse in violation of a criminal law of a State is subject to new Federal penalties in addition to any penalty that may be provided by the State in which the injury occurs. Second, any person who crosses State lines and violates a valid protective order commits a Federal offense subject to Federal penalties similar to existing penalties of assault on Federal territory.

Section 211 also provides enhanced protection for victims of the new domestic violence crimes created under this chapter. First, it specifically authorizes courts to enter orders of protection pending final adjudication of a case, upon a showing that the victim is in danger of further injury by the alleged abuser. Second, it provides for victim restitution on the same terms and conditions as provided in section 113.

Finally, section 211 makes protective orders issued by one State good in the other 49 States. Under current law, a spouse who obtains a “stay away” order in one State may lose the protection of that order if she crosses State lines. Modelled on existing law addressing child custody in parental kidnapping cases, this section provides that any valid protective order issued by a State should be given “full faith and credit” by a sister State.

Subtitle B—Arrest in spousal abuse cases

This subtitle encourages States to treat domestic violence as a serious crime. It creates a new $25 million grant program for those States with policies encouraging or requiring arrest of spouse abusers. Eligible grantees are those States, municipalities, or local government entities demonstrating that their laws have significantly increased the number of arrests of spouse abusers and certifying that their laws or policies either encourage or mandate arrest of spouse abusers. Grants are targeted for increased centralization, training and education, and implementation of pro-arrest policies.

Subtitle C—Funding for shelters

This subtitle triples the funding authorization for battered women’s shelters to $75 million for fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993.

Subtitle D—Family Violence Prevention and Services Act amendments

This subtitle makes a number of improvements in existing legislation on family violence, the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act.

Section 251. Expansion of purpose: This section makes clear that federal programs on domestic violence should help to increase public awareness about domestic violence.

Section 252. Expansion of State demonstration grant program: This section makes clear that grants may be made for the purpose of increasing awareness about domestic violence.

Section 253. Grants for public information campaigns: This section provides grants for public information campaigns, including public service announcements, print media, billboards, and public transit advertising. As provided in subtitle C, no more than 5 percent of funds authorized under the Act may be used for public information campaigns. Groups qualifying for such grants must have experience in conducting such campaigns, provide assurances that education will be targeted to groups at the greatest risk, and provide any other information that the Secretary of Health and Human Services may require.

Section 254. Commissions on domestic violence: This section provides that States receiving funds under title II must provide assurances that, no later than 1 year after the receipt of funds, the State shall have established a commission on domestic violence to examine issues on mandatory arrest, no-drop prosecution policies, prosecution delays, the use of plea agreements, reporting practices and other issues concerning domestic violence. No more than 2 percent of any grant issued under the Act may be used to support such a commission.

Section 255. Indian tribes: This section provides that no less than $1 million of funds authorized shall be made available to Indian tribes.

Section 256. Funding limitations: This section eliminates statutory language that limits funding to any one entity to $150,000.

Section 257. Grants to entities other than States; local share: This section provides that demonstration grants may be made only to those entities providing 50 percent of the project funding.

Section 258. Shelter and related assistance: This section clarifies that at least 75 percent of authorized and appropriated monies must be spent on shelter assistance, with the remaining 25 percent devoted to special demonstration grants. It also broadens the scope of services that may be entitled to grant monies. Rather than simply providing shelter, monies may be used for day care services, educational services, and other specified purposes.

Section 259. Law enforcement training and technical assistance grants: This section clarifies, contrary to existing practice, that grants for training of law enforcement officers must be granted to nonprofit organizations with demonstrated experience in providing training and technical assistance. This overrules existing practices whereby technical grants are awarded to for-profit entities. These grants should be awarded to volunteer organizations expert in providing services to battered women; grants to law enforcement officers to train law enforcement officers are insufficient without the input of volunteer groups that deal with the victims of spouse abuse.

Section 260. Report on recordkeeping: This section requires the Attorney General to submit to Congress a report and recommendation on the problems of recording domestic violence complaints, arrests, and convictions. The report must also address the feasibility of, and provide a timetable for, requiring national statistics that reflect the relationship of the offender and the victim for aggravated assault, rape, and other violent crimes.

Section 261. Model State leadership incentive grants for domestic violence intervention: This section authorizes a new $25 million grant program to encourage national leadership in the states on domestic violence. Sums will be awarded to 10 States. To qualify, a State must have a law that requires mandatory arrest of a person that police have probable cause to believe has committed an act of domestic violence or probable cause to believe has violated an outstanding civil protection order. In addition, a "model State" must develop statewide policies that encourage no-drop prosecution, special units devoted to domestic violence, pursuit of cases even where the victim refuses to cooperate, and limits diversion to extraordinary cases. Finally a "model State" must develop statewide policies for judicial handling of cases to reduce the automatic issuance of mutual restraining orders and discourage custody by abusing spouses.

Section 262. Funding for technical assistance centers: This section provides for five regional technical assistance centers for domestic violence shelters.

TITLE III—CIVIL RIGHTS

Section 301. Civil rights: This section provides a civil rights remedy for gender-motivated crimes. Modeled on sections 1981, 1983 and 1985(3), this section provides a Federal court remedy to victims of gender-based violence. The conduct covered under this section includes crimes of violence, including felony rape, sexual assault, kidnapping, and any other crime overwhelmingly motivated by gender. Compensatory and punitive damages, where appropriate, may be recovered.

Like the statutes on which it is modelled—42 U.S.C. 1981, 1983, and 1985(3)—this section reaches gender-based discrimination by private persons and by persons acting under color of State law. Nothing in this section should be interpreted as extending or revising existing law on States' failure to protect citizens as that law has developed under sections 1981, 1983, or 1985(3). All procedural issues should be resolved in accord with current law governing sections 1981, 1983, and 1985(3).

TITLE IV—SAFE CAMPUSES FOR WOMEN ACT

Section 401. Short title: This section provides the short title to this Title, the "Safe Campuses of Women Act of 1990."

Section 403. Findings: This section finds that rape prevention and education is essential to an educational environment free of fear; that rape on campus is widespread and poses a grave threat not only to students' physical well-being but also to their educational opportunities; and that action by colleges and universities may make significant progress in helping to prevent rape, including acquaintance rape.

Section 404. Grants for campus rape education: This section authorizes the first Federal program for college rape education. The Secretary of Education is authorized to provide $10 million in grants, on a competitive basis, to institutions for the purpose of providing rape education. Two types of grants are available—grants for model demonstration programs developed in coordination with existing rape crisis centers and grants for the implementation and operation of existing programs. Applications must assure the Secretary that Federal funds shall be used to supplement, not to replace, funds already allocated for campus rape prevention activities. Priority for all grants is given to the neediest institutions.

Section 405. Disclosure of disciplinary proceedings in sex assault cases on campus: This section provides campus rape victims with the "right to know" the fate of disciplinary proceedings against their attackers. Under current law, universities often refuse to disclose the outcome of disciplinary proceedings to any person, including the victim of a rape or other violent crime. This section changes current law to allow disclosure to crime victims of disciplinary proceedings.

TITLE V—EQUAL JUSTICE FOR WOMEN IN THE COURTS ACT OF 1990

Section 501. Short title: This section provides the short title of this title, the "Equal Justice for Women in the Courts Act of 1990."

Subtitle A—Education and training for judges and court personnel in State courts

This subtitle provides training for State court judges on a number of subjects related to crimes against women.

Section 511. Grants authorized: This section authorizes the Attorney General to provide grants through the State Justice Institute for the purpose of developing, testing, and presenting model programs to be used in the States.

Section 512. Training provided by grants: This section outlines training subjects such as the nature and incidence of rape; the physical, psychological and economic impact of rape and domestic violence; the application of rape shield laws; the use of testimony on rape trauma syndrome, and the legitimate reasons why women victims of crimes do not report those crimes.

Section 513. Cooperation in developing programs in making grants under this title: This section provides that the Attorney General shall insure that model programs are carried out in conjunction with a variety of persons with knowledge and expertise in the criminal justice process, including law enforcement personnel, victim advocates, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and recognized legal experts.

Section 514. Authorization of appropriations: This section authorizes $600,000 to carry out the purposes of subtitle A, the training of State court judges.

Subtitle B—Education and training for judges and court personnel in Federal courts

While subtitle A addresses the problems faced by State court judges, this subtitle focuses on Federal court judges.

Section 521. Education and training grants: This section provides that the Federal Judicial Center shall conduct a study of the nature and extent of gender bias in the Federal courts, with the issuance of a final report including their empirical findings and recommendations for legislative, administrative, and judicial action.

This section also directs the Federal Judicial Center to develop, test, and disseminate model programs to be used in training Federal judges and court personnel in the laws on rape, sexual assault, domestic violence and other crimes of violence motivated by gender. Topics to be covered include those outlined in subtitle A as well as the new remedies provided in title III of this act.

Section 522. Cooperation in developing programs: This section is identical to section 513, but applies to Federal judges.

Section 523. Authorization of appropriations: This section authorizes $400,000 to carry out the purposes of subtitle B.

VI. ESTIMATED COST OF LEGISLATION

In accordance with paragraph 11(a) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate and section 404 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the committee provides the following cost estimate, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office:

U.S CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 18, 1990.

HON. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for S. 2754, the Violence Against Women Act of 1990.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE—COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill number: S. 2754.
2. Bill title: Violence Against Women Act of 1990.
3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, October 4, 1990.
4. Bill purpose: S. 2754 would make a number of changes and additions to Federal laws related to violence and crime against women. Title I of the bill would:
 - Increase Federal penalties and require restitution for certain sex crimes;

Authorize $300 million for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 for grants to State and local governments to combat violent crimes against women;

Earmark up to $10 million in Urban Mass Transportation discretionary capital grants to increase the safety and security of public transportation systems;

Authorize up to $10 million to reduce the incidence of violent crime in the National Park System and up to $15 million for State grants to make capital improvements to increase safety in public parks and recreation areas;

Establish a National Commission on Violent Crime Against Women;

Amend the Federal Rules of Evidence with respect to past sexual behavior of alleged victims; and Authorize $65 million for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 for State grants to provide rape prevention and education programs.

Title II of the bill would:

Establish Federal penalties and require restitution for violence against spouses;

Authorize up to $25 million annually for grants to State and local governments to encourage States and localities to treat spousal violence as a serious violation of criminal law;

Authorize $75 million for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 to carry out the provisions of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act;

Authorize $25 million for fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 1992 and 1993 for model State leadership incentive grants for domestic violence intervention; and

Make a number of other changes to the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act.

Title III of the bill would create a cause of action for the recovery of compensatory and punitive damages for crimes of violence overwhelmingly motivated by the victim's gender.

Title IV of the bill would authorize $10 million for fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994 for grants to or contracts with institutions of higher education for rape education and prevention programs.

Title V of the bill would:

Authorize $600,000 for fiscal year 1991 for grants to develop, test, present, and disseminate model programs to be used by states in training judges and court personnel in the laws of the states on rape, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other crimes of violence motivated by the victim's gender; and Authorize $400,000 for fiscal year 1991 for the Federal Judicial Center to study the nature and extent of gender bias in the federal courts and to develop, test, present, and disseminate model programs to be used in training federal judges and court personnel in the laws on rape, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other crimes of violence motivated by the victim's gender.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government:

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
Estimated authorization level	518	501	503	36	25
Estimated outlays.....	160	380	484	369	151

The costs of this bill would fall within budget functions 300, 500, 550 and 750.

Basis of estimate: The estimate assumes that the Congress will appropriate the full amounts authorized for each fiscal year. For programs with specific amounts authorized for 1991 and such sums authorizations for subsequent years, we have projected the indefinite authorizations by adjusting the 1991 level for inflation. (These include the model state leadership incentive grants and grants for campus rape education.) The outlay estimates are based on the historical spending rates for these or similar activities.

There is no budget authority or spending associated with the earmarking of up to $10 million in Urban Mass Transportation discretionary capital grants to increase the safety and security of public transportation systems. S. 2754 would earmark existing contract authority, but would not increase the amounts available.

Under current law such sums as may be necessary are authorized for fiscal year 1991 for the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act. S. 2754 would authorize $75 million for fiscal year 1991 to carry out the provisions of the Act. CBO estimates that the 1991 authorization contained in S. 2754 would be $66 million higher than the 1990 appropriation adjusted for inflation.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: Most of the funding authorized by S. 2754 is in the form of grants to state and local governments. Several provisions of the bill would affect the allowed uses of funds by grant recipients.

Two provisions of S. 2754 could affect state eligibility for certain grants authorized by the bill and could result in increased costs to the states. One provision would require states, at the request of a victim of a sexual act, to administer an AIDS test to the defendant convicted under state law of such sexual act, and to disclose the results of such test to the victim. The other provision would require that states incur the full cost of forensic medical exams for victims of sexual assault. States would need to meet the requirements only in order to be eligible for certain grant funds; such requirements would not otherwise need to be met.

To the extent that states administer AIDS tests at the request of a victim of a sexual act, and to the extent that victims make such requests, there could be additional costs to the states. There also could be increased costs to the states to the extent that states incur the full costs of forensic medical exams for victims of sexual assault. We do not expect the increased costs to be significant.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: None.

9. Estimate prepared by: Mitchell Rosenfeld.

10. Estimate approved by: C.G. Nuckols, for James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

VII. REGULATORY IMPACT STATEMENT

Pursuant to paragraph 11(B), rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the committee, after due consideration, concludes that the act will not have any direct regulatory impact.

VIII. CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with paragraph 12 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, changes in existing law made by S. 2754, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets; new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

§ 2248. Mandatory restitution

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the terms of section 3663 of this title, and in addition to any other civil or criminal penalty authorized by law, the court shall order restitution for any offense under this chapter.

(b) SCOPE AND NATURE OF ORDER.—(1) The order of restitution under this section shall direct that— records submitted, the court may require additional documentation or hear testimony on those questions. Any records filed, or testimony heard, pursuant to this section, shall be in camera in the judge's chambers. CHAPTER 110A—VIOLENCE AGAINST SPOUSES

Sec. 2261. Traveling to commit spousal abuse.

Sec. 2263. Restitution.

Sec. 2264. Full faith and credit given to protection orders.

§ 2261. Traveling to commit spousal abuse

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who travels or causes another (including the intended victim) to travel across State lines or in interstate commerce and who, during the course of any such travel or thereafter, does an act that injures his or her spouse or intimate partner in violation of a criminal law of the State where the injury occurs, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years but not less than 3 months, or both, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment provided under State law.

(b) NO STATE LAW.—If no fine or term of imprisonment is provided for under the law of the State where the injury occurs, a person violating this section shall be punished as follows:

(1) If permanent disfigurement or life-threatening bodily injury results, by imprisonment for not more than 20 years; where serious bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both; where bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(2) If the offense is committed with intent to commit another felony, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

(3) If the offense is committed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(4) If the offense is a simple assault by fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of no more than 1 year.

(c) CRIMINAL INTENT.—If no fine or term of imprisonment is provided for under the law of the State where the injury occurs, the criminal intent of the offender required to establish an offense under this section is the general intent to do the acts that result in injury to a spouse or intimate partner and not the specific intent to violate the law of a State.

§ 2262. Interstate violation of protection orders

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who travels or causes another (including the intended victim) to travel across State lines or in interstate commerce and who, during the course of such travel or thereafter, commits an act that violates a valid protection order issued by a State, with the intent to injure his or her spouse or intimate partner, shall be punished as follows:

(1) If permanent disfigurement or life-threatening bodily injury results, by imprisonment for not more than 20 years; where serious bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both; where bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(2) If the offense is committed with intent to commit another felony, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

(3) If the offense is committed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(4) If the offender has previously violated any prior protection order issued against that person for the protection of the same victim, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years and not less than 6 months, or both.

(5) If the offense is a simple assault by fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) CRIMINAL INTENT.—The criminal intent required to establish the offense provided in this section is the general intent to do the acts which result in injury to a spouse or intimate partner and not the specific intent to violate a protection order or State law.

§ 2263. Interim protections

In furtherance of the purposes of this chapter, and to protect against abuse of a spouse or intimate partner, any judge or magistrate before whom a criminal case under this chapter is brought, shall have the power to issue temporary orders of protection for the benefit of the complaining spouse pending final adjudication of the case, upon a showing of a likelihood of danger to the complaining spouse.

§ 2264. Restitution

(a) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any fine or term of imprisonment provided under this chapter, and notwithstanding the terms of section 3663 of this title, the court shall order restitution to the victim of an offense under this chapter.

(b) SCOPE AND NATURE OF ORDER.—(1) The order of restitution under this section shall direct that—

(A) the defendant pay to the victim the full amount of the victim's losses as determined by the court, pursuant to subsection (3); and

(B) the United States Attorney enforce the restitution order by all available and reasonable means.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "full amount of the victim's losses" includes any costs incurred by the victim for—

(A) medical services relating to physical, psychiatric, or psychological care;

(B) physical and occupational therapy or rehabilitation; and

(C) any income lost by the victim as a proximate result of the offense;

(D) attorneys' fees, plus any costs incurred in obtaining a civil protection order; and

(E) any other losses suffered by the victim as a proximate result of the offense.

(3) Restitution orders under this section are mandatory. A court may not decline to issue an order under this section because of—

(A) the economic circumstances of the defendant; or

(B) the fact that victim has, or is entitled to, receive compensation for his or her injuries from the proceeds of insurance.

(4)(A) Notwithstanding the terms of paragraph (3), the court may take into account the economic circumstances of the defendant in determining the manner in which and the schedule according to which the restitution is to be paid, including—

(i) the financial resources and other assets of the defendant;

(ii) projected earnings, earning capacity, and other income of the defendant; and

(iii) any financial obligations of the offender, including obligations to dependents.

(B) An order under this section may direct the defendant to make a single lump-sum payment, or partial payments at specified intervals. The order shall provide that the defendant's restitutionary obligation takes priority over any criminal fine ordered.

* * * * *

In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance; and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.

* * * * *

(e) INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any evidentiary rulings made pursuant to this rule are subject to interlocutory appeal by the government or by the alleged victim.

(f) RULE OF RELEVANCE AND PRIVILEGE.—If the prosecution seeks to offer evidence of prior sexual history, the provisions of this rule may be waived by the alleged victim.

Rule 412A. Evidence of victim's past behavior in other criminal cases

(a) REPUTATION AND OPINION EVIDENCE EXCLUDED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case, other than a sex offense case governed by rule 412, reputation or opinion evidence of the past sexual behavior of an alleged victim is not admissible.

Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the alleged victim.

(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At such hearing, the parties may call witnesses, including the alleged victim and offer relevant evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the defendant seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies the evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the alleged victim may be examined or cross-examined. In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance, and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.

(2) the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice.

(c) PROCEDURES.—(1) If the defendant intends to offer evidence of specific instances of the plaintiff's past sexual behavior, the defendant shall make a written motion to offer such evidence not later than 15 days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin, except that the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case. Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the plaintiff.

(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. (3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice, such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the plaintiff may be examined or cross-examined.
